

Museum Exhibit on Display this Month at the Middle School Library

Wave 4 Oct 1984

An important addition to the program of the Media Center at the Middle School this year is the revolving exhibit from the University of Utah Museum of Fine Arts. This month, watercolors by G. Vaughn Forsyth, a Salt Lake City artist, are on display for the students, teachers, parents and members of the community. There are six striking and thought-provoking views of a brilliant yellow chair suspended in southern Utah landscapes.

Mr. Forsyth tells us that "This exhibit is part of a series of 48 watercolors that began as perspective drawings of an ordinary chair in some unusual positions.. somewhat similar to little books that show cartoon action by flipping pages..Seven years later, as I was hiking in Arches, I envisioned the chairs as foreground above that marvelous landscape.

If you can imagine flying an airplane over Canyonlands and seeing a most unusual sight... perhaps you can imagine a chair flying along just above this already interesting landscape. If you flew up close to it...you might be rubbing your eyes and pinching yourself thinking you might be dreaming. However, here it is!"

Through the work of Sue McCoy, Educational Curator at the Museum; Kent Ellertson, NUES Director; and Vicki Renz, Media Coordinator; the students and the community have the opportunity to view a series of exhibits of different types of art works which will enrich their educational experience. Parents and interested community members are invited to see this unusual exhibit. Come to the Middle School Media Center during school hours. Arrangements can be made for other times by calling the school Media Center at 654-0550.
